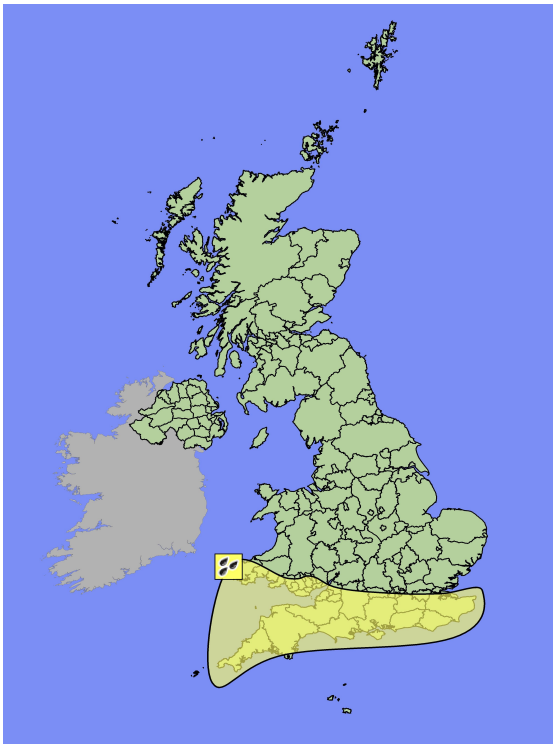
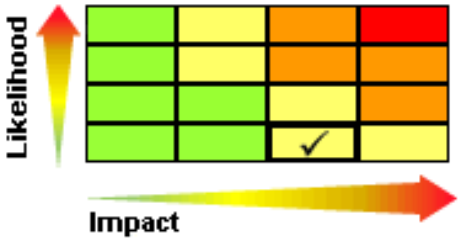
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
The forecast for the weekend remains a challenge and uncertainty is higher than average. However if the rain does reach our shores then it is likely to be heavy at times with between 20 mm and 30 mm falling widely with potential for 40 to 50 mm over hills.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Rain

Valid from 00:00 on Sun, 23rd Sep 2012 until 23:59 on Sun, 23rd Sep 2012

There is a risk that wet and windy weather will spread north from the Bay of Biscay on Sunday to some southern areas. However there is a large amount of uncertainty at present such that it is possible that the rain may not reach our shores at all. The public should be aware of this risk and keep up to date with our forecasts as we approach the weekend.
